Brooklyn Law School Opens 42nd Year

Stitt, '12, Named Jurist, Domestic Relations Court

Brooklyn Attorney Designated by Mayor to Seat on Bench

TERM RUNS TO 1944

Designee to Important Judicial Post Had Long Career in Public Service

Theodore Stitt, '12, Brooklyn attorney, was sworn in by Mayor LaGuardia as a justice of the Domestic Relations Court, to fill out the unexpired term of Justice John Warren Hill, which ends on Oct. 31, 1944.

The Mayor informed the new appointee that the Domestic Relations Court was one of the city's most important judicial bodies, and said:

"It's hard work, plenty of it. It requires a great deal of common sense and understanding of the problems of the most important citizens of our country, our children."

Mr. Stitt was born in New York City, June 5th, 1887. He was educated in public elementary and high schools, Brooklyn Law School of St. Lawrence University, and the Columbia University School of Accountancy.

Before admission to the Bar in 1913, he spent twelve years in journalism as City Hall reporter and various assignments for New York Morning Sun and Brooklyn Standard Union. Later he served as assistant attorney for the Legal Aid Society, and as secretary to Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson under Mayor John Purroy Mitchell.

Private in First World War

Mr. Stitt enlisted as a private in the first World War, served overseas and was discharged as Ordnance Sergeant.

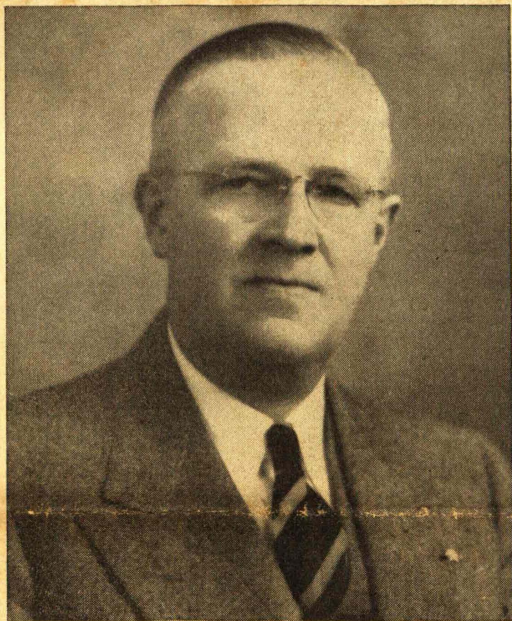

Immediately after the war, he was elected to and served two terms as member of Assembly from the 18th District, Brooklyn.

He was unanimously elected Commander-in-Chief of Veterans of Foreign Wars at El Paso, Texas in 1926.

While in private practice he devoted much time to rendering free legal service to the estates of incompetent veterans. He was a member of the Board of Legal Consultants, U. S. Veterans' Bureau acting as chairman of the Committee on Field Organization.

For the past twenty years he has held judicial office as one of the bankruptcy referees of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Brooklyn.

Accelerated Courses An Aid to Education

In response to a request from the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, Dean William Payson Richardson issued the following statement on the subject, "Significant Effects of the present World War on Legal Education in the United States." The statement is published in The Eagle's annual educational number, August, 1942.

In common with other American institutions, higher education has been profoundly affected by the war. Hundreds of thousands of young men have been called into armed service without having had opportunity of finishing their courses in colleges and professional schools. To alleviate this condition as much as circumstances permit, the period between matriculation and the awarding of degrees has been materially shortened.

This is a step that should have been taken long ago. America's advanced education has for years consumed an unreasonable amount of time. Originally designed to give scholastic background to a professional or business career, higher education had become so extended as to keep young people from participation in the affairs of life until middle age had been reached. This condition has been neither reasonable nor wholesome.

No Sacrifice Of Scholarship

The education that has been given over a long-drawn-out series of years could just as well have been given in less time, without sacrificing one iota of the high standards of scholarship.

DEAN NOTES CHANGES

Tells of Curriculum Readjustments to Meet Needs of Present-Day Students

The Brooklyn Law School of St. Lawrence University will open its forty-second school year on Monday, September 28. The curriculum, it has been announced by Dean William Payson Richardson, has been newly adjusted to meet conditions created by the emergencies of the present day.

"Particular thought has been given," Dean Richardson said, "to the problems of students desirous of completing their education for a professional career with the least possible delay. The Court of Appeals has amended its rules, under the authority of which we have arranged our programme so that the course which formerly took three years, can now be completed in two years, and the four year evening course may be completed in three years. These shortened or 'accelerated' courses are available to all who wish to take advantage of them. The work is identical with that given in the courses whose completion covers a longer elapsed period. The sole sacrifice the student makes on an accelerated course is of part of his long summer vacation period.

Important New Laws

"That, however, is but one of the changes provided by our readjusted curriculum. Every intelligent person recognizes that the world is undergoing profound changes. In our own country stresses and strains have fallen upon our government in many of its functions. To meet the needs of the present day, there has been a widespread adoption of new statutes.

"No longer is the conduct of business affairs left largely to the devices of individuals, as it was in the not distant past. Because of the complexities of present-day conditions, Congress and the State Legislatures have passed many laws providing for governmental supervision, governmental direction and governmental assistance. The demand for greater social security has led to the adoption of laws by which payments are made to unfortunates unable to provide adequately for themselves.

Justice Cuff Relates Tale of a Lectern

Justice Thomas J. Cuff, '11, provides an anecdote that goes to show that even in these serious days, leading members of the bench and bar are not unacquainted with the lighter aspects of life. The anecdote concerns a lectern or reading table. It started in January, 1940, when John W. Davis addressed the Judicial Section of the New York Bar Association at its annual luncheon. Mr. Davis' topic was "My Grievances."

Among Mr. Davis' complaints was that the Court of Appeals provided no lectern upon which counsel, arguing a case, might place their notes. This, he explained, was a great inconvenience to lawyers with eyes not adapted to reading memoranda on a table several feet away. Later, Chief Judge Irving Lehman replied that there was no lectern because economy had struck the State administration. "The Governor," he explained, "whom I once knew fairly well, struck out the item—it was $15—from the budget."

It was all humorously presented and wholesomely enjoyed. Lawyers, however, who argued cases before the Court of Appeals agreed that there was merit as well as humor in Mr. Davis' observation. Now, Justice Cuff carried a lectern with him for the convenience of lawyers appearing before him. It suddenly disappeared, how-

Degrees Conferred at Fortieth Commencement Exercises

Justice Pecora Says Just Peace Must Be Assured

Addresses Graduates and Friends at Ceremonies in Auditorium

DEAN AWARDS HONORS

Degrees Are Conferred by President Jencks of the St. Lawrence University

One hundred forty-one degrees were conferred at the fortieth Commencement Exercises of the Brooklyn Law School of St. Lawrence University, held on the evening of June 11 in the Auditorium of the Law School Building, at 375 Pearl Street, Brooklyn.

The principal address was delivered by Justice Ferdinand Pecora of the Supreme Court, upon whom the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred. Other degrees included six doctorates of juridical science, two masters of law and 132 bachelors of law. The degrees were conferred by President Millard Henry Jencks of the St. Lawrence University, and Dean William Payson Richardson announced the winners of honors and awarded the prizes.

Justice Pecora's Message

Justice Pecora warned that serious problems will remain to be solved after we have won the present war.

"When democracy's leaders sit in the victor's chairs around the peace table," he said, "let them remember that in this all-out global war the greatest sacrifices were made by the people—the common people. Theirs will have been the victory in the war. Theirs should be the lasting victory in the peace. And theirs it will be if that peace is written in terms that will effectuate the aspirations of men and women everywhere for a freer and economically sufficient life.

"And when that peace shall have been formulated, America must not repudiate any portion of her full share of the responsibility for its enforcement. Dereliction on our part in that respect would amount to a wanton betrayal of those who gave up their lives in the struggle to win that peace."

Terms Of Peace

In formulating the terms of peace, that democracy must be maintained whose essence is equality, Justice Pecora continued. "True democracy today means something more than political freedom. It implies industrial freedom as well. In the modern industrial condition of society, with all the economic complexities which have arisen from technological development, political democracy would languish unless it were accompanied by industrial democracy. Men can no longer be politically free and industrially shackled at the same time."

"Bitter racial and religious hatreds will have to be dissipated. International jealousies of long standing will have to be composed. The many economic and political dislocations caused by the war will have to be repaired."

Awarded Honorary Degree

Ferdinand Pecora

Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York; distinguished jurist; learned author; notable proponent of public causes; preeminent as a criminal prosecutor; distinguished in the service of our nation as counsel to the Senate Committee on Security Practices; wise and just administrator of the Securities and Exchange Act; assiduous scholar of the law; eminent humanitarian; faithful conservator of public trusts.

Fall Semester Starts Sept. 28; Plans Announced

"A host of new agencies and departments of government have come into being. New laws are being carried into effect by them. The modern law school must give recognition to the fact that comprehensive training in the basic subjects upon which our law is grounded, while still of primary importance, is no longer sufficient. It is essential also to give education in the newer aspects of law.

"There is imperative need for the services of properly trained men and women to conduct the legal affairs of government offices. Trained men and women, too, are demanded by individuals and by corporations whose interests are involved in orders that are issued by government agencies on a wide variety of subjects such as taxation, labor relations, financial operations and management generally.

"The Brooklyn Law School of St. Lawrence University has long acted upon the belief that in addition to the more formal type of education provided by class-room lecture and recitation work, practical experience in the actual handling of legal cases is invaluable to the student.

"For a number of years, the school has conducted a Practice Court. The Practice Court provides within the walls of our school all the setting and formality of an actual court of law. This rounds out the curriculum in such a way as to give students complete preparation for their professional careers."

Brooklyn Law School Alumni Celebrate Fortieth Reunion

Thomas G. Grace Chosen President For Current Year

Dean Richardson Discusses Problems of Legal Education Today

FUNCTION A SUCCESS

Justice Cuff Credits Committee of 25 With Achievement; James Wick Speaks

The fortieth annual alumni reunion of the Brooklyn Law School was celebrated at an informal luncheon held at the Towers Hotel, Clark Street, Brooklyn, on the afternoon of May 9. The following were elected officers for the year 1942-1943:

President, Thomas G. Grace, '24; first vice president, Daniel L. McNamara, '11; second vice president, Jacob Aronson, '06; third vice president, Magistrate Abner C. Surpless, '08; secretary, Louis C. Wills, '05; treasurer, Sheriff John J. McCloskey; Advisory Board: Joseph Katz, '21, chairman, Miss Genevieve E. Flinn, '35, and James E. Finegan, '35.

Justice Thomas J. Cuff, chairman of the luncheon committee, presided, and welcomed the 500 alumni and guests present. "This inspiring luncheon," he said, "is the handiwork of a committee of twenty-five, who had determined to hold a reunion despite the unfavorable conditions created by the war."

United For Victory

"The committee felt that, while every ounce of our effort and every bit of our devotion must be directed toward victory, that did not mean that we should completely abandon the normal relationships of life. It was therefore decided to hold some sort of function, not an elaborate banquet such as we have held in past years, but something, as informal as possible and at as little cost as possible."

"We thought that if perhaps a hundred persons could be gathered in these critical days our objective would be achieved. For the committee determined to eliminate the heavy cost of mail solicitation of the 8,000 men and women on our alumni roster. It was decided that word should be spread instead by individual contact. That so many of you have gathered is a tribute to the work of our committee and to the love we bear to our school and particularly to the one who is the personal friend of each one of us—Dean Richardson. It occurs to me that every alumnus who heard of this function must be here today. We express our regrets to those who would have liked to attend, but who did not, perhaps, get word in time."

After the singing of the Star Spangled Banner, Justice Cuff introduced Dean Richardson, who addressed the alumni as follows:

Dean Richardson's Talk

"The memory of years gone by are with me today, as I look into your faces so familiar to me. Through the years you have been very close to me. My heart is filled with gratitude that I have been blessed with the great friendship that you have given to me."

"These war days are days

ALUMNI PRESIDENT

Thomas G. Grace, '24

that bring many problems in their train. As you well know, in the administration of educational institutions, there are always problems to solve. But never have they been as serious as the problems that confront colleges and universities at the present time. That is due to the fact that our Government is taking into armed service so many hundreds of thousands of the young men who otherwise would be continuing their education. This natural shrinkage in attendance has fallen with particular force upon the law schools, since it is the young men of the law-school age group from which the largest proportion of service men are being taken.

God-Speed To Those In Service

"Our good wishes and our blessings go with our graduates and undergraduates wherever they may be in combat or in preparation for combat to help rid the world of the force that threatens to overcome the freedom we as lawyers have learned to cherish. We bid them God-speed and a happy return as speedily as victory may be won. Their first duty is to carry on for their country. And no less must we at home shoulder our burdens and carry on, so that the institutions upon which our democracy is based may be kept secure."

"During the World War of 25 years ago, we were confronted by problems similar to those of today. We faced them then, and we solved them then just as we are facing them and will solve them in these even more critical days. We are proud of the fact that never in its entire career has the Brooklyn Law School ever been in debt. We have always met our expenses without calling upon the alumni."

Reduction In Attendance

"It is to be noted that the war has drastically cut into the revenues from tuition fees paid to American law schools. There was a decrease in attendance of 9,000 students in the United States in the year 1940-1941 as compared to the year before. Since last November to March of the present year there has been a further decrease of 3,437."

"This condition has assumed grave proportions to many of the smaller schools. There are at present 109 law schools in the nation approved by the American Bar Association. Two of them today have fewer than 20 students; 25 have between 20 and 50 and 39 have between 50 and 100.

"In the midst of this emergency, we have kept constantly in mind what has always been a primary purpose of your school—to give a sound, thorough training in the basic elements of the law. Our purpose has been not merely to turn out lawyers, but to turn out leaders of men, and in that respect our school has established a proud reputation."

"I treasure every moment of our past associations. I treasure these moments that I am here with you. It is inspiring to all, to gather with friends and classmates of former years. May we meet again next year and once again find inspiration in our association."

Judge Webster J. Oliver, '11, Presiding Judge of the United States Customs Court, spoke in a humorous vein on the subject of the difficulties of understanding the law applying to customs, and James L. Wick spoke on the prospects that lie ahead, a discussion of matters that came to his attention during a recent visit to war-time London.

WAR AND LAW

An Editorial: by Prof. Martin H. Weyrauch

IN this time of grave emergency, there comes to every American a desire to know just what part he can play to help bring about victory.

To those called into service the path of duty is made quite clear. These hundreds of thousands of young men are trained in the arts and crafts of combat. They are asked to go wherever they may be called, perhaps to the very ends of the earth, to fight for the preservation of the ideals for which America stands—freedom and hope, and happiness and opportunity.

Those called to arms are, however, but a fractional part of the population of our nation. More than three million are in the army and navy. Approximately forty times that number remain in civilian life. How each might serve the cause of victory is not always an easy problem for the individuals in this stay-at-home fraction to solve. Those engaged in the production of goods for combat owe the duty of preventing any halt in the supply of the vital materials that they manufacture. But munitions workers, in common with those engaged in other pursuits, have another duty not connected solely with the labor they perform. That duty is so to act as to strengthen the principles for which our democracy stands.

Two little three-letter words provide a key to the meaning of the present struggle and a guide to patriotic conduct. The one word is WAR. The other word is LAW. These simple three-letter words sound somewhat alike, but between them there is an unbridgeable gulf of difference.

The present war is a war against law. The dictators have plainly announced their purpose of imposing their system of force upon everyone the world over. They declare as their aim the uprooting of democratic freedoms. They assert that they intend to substitute compulsion for law. If they win, there will be no individual rights; nothing but an alternative of death or subservience to someone who by trick, device, or accident is in a position of power.

On the other hand, the United Nations have proclaimed the right of all peoples to freedom. This means freedom of spoken or printed thoughts, freedom of government, freedom of worship and even freedom from want. To achieve such results is not a programme of force, but one dependent upon thoughtful cooperation. It demands for its success world-wide understanding, tolerance, faith, hope, and confidence. In brief, it is a programme that depends upon law for its establishment and for its accomplishment, for law is of the essence of the vital human freedoms.

Dictatorships cannot exist in the bright sunshine of law. They flourish, like noxious weeds of the night, only in places where the light of law has been extinguished and human beings grope blindly in the darkness of bigotry, intolerance and oppression.

To be victorious in the present conflict, the dictators would have to do much more than to overcome the free peoples of the world by the metallic force of their mechanized might. They would need in addition to crush memory from human minds. They would need to extinguish the spark of human spirit. They would need to obliterate every concept or recollection of law, and of the blessings for which law stands.

But the spirit of humanity is a flame which cannot be quenched. Though it is possible to persecute men and women and to kill them in savage disregard of the sanctity of human life, it is impossible to destroy the truth in the human minds of those who survive.

Thus it is that as long as human beings exist on this earth, the knowledge will live that the way to human happiness and progress lies through the open gateway of the law.

This, then, is the unceasing duty then of every American:
To know the law and to safeguard the law.

Knowledge of the law was never more imperative than it is today. It is imperative because only through knowledge can the law be protected when it is assailed by its enemies. Only by knowledge of the law can there be built a happier World of Tomorrow. Yes, America is going to need men and women educated in the law, to help in the reconstruction in the days that lie ahead. Perhaps too, the world outside of our own boundaries will ask that we teach them the practical application of the law which has built the American democracy.

Perhaps it may be the proud destiny of America to help lead the world away from the recurrent tragedies of war. There is one way, and only one way, by which such an objective might be achieved. That way is the way of the Law.

Accelerated Courses An Aid to Education

ship that should be of primary importance in any educational programme. It has remained for the war to bring about a shortened curriculum.

One of the reasons for the unhealthy length of educational courses has been the development of an over-long summer vacation period. For no reason based either upon the physical or mental welfare of the average young man or young woman, several months of inertia have become accepted as part of the study year. Sight seemed completely lost of the fact that work can be done in June, July, August and September as it is done in other months. The fact that other activities are not suspended during the summer has not been considered a valid reason for continuing education without interruption.

War Brings Change In System

Now the war has brought about the change, and there is general acknowledgment of the fact that education, like other human activities, is the better for continuity of effort; that those who keep at it steadily with adequate, but not unduly protracted, rest periods, can accomplish the same results in a much shorter length of time.

It was to meet the needs of the war situation that the so-called "accelerated" courses have been introduced by colleges and professional schools. Law schools have adopted shortened schedules in conformity with new requirements adopted by the New York Court of Appeals. The summer vacation period has been cut down, so that students who wish to take the accelerated course may complete law studies that formerly consumed three years, in an elapsed period of only two years. Those who formerly were on a four year, or part time, schedule are now able, if they desire to do so, to finish their course in three years.

Same Course Of Study Given

In all this, there has been no sacrifice of subject matter. The same number of classroom and study hours as before are still required. The sole effect of the change is to make professional education available in an appreciably shorter time. This is a step that should work out advantageously to a student who is desirous of completing his education and undertaking the

John J. Callahan, '26, Named Court Clerk

By resolution of the Justices of the Appellate Division, Second Judicial Department, John J. Callahan, '26, has been designated as clerk of the court, in place of the late H. Drummond Brown. Mr. Callahan, who resides in Brooklyn, was admitted to the Bar in 1927.

His public service began as a clerk in the office of the Commissioners of National Education, Dublin, Ireland, from January to December, 1910. He entered the service of the City of New York at the age of eighteen, in January, 1914, as a clerk in the Bureau of Attendance of the Board of Education, and remained in that department until May, 1920, when he was appointed a stenographer on the staff of Borough President Riegelmann. He was appointed secretary to Supreme Court Justice Edward Riegelmann on January 1, 1925, resigning on February 1, 1939, to be appointed deputy clerk of the Appellate Division, Second Judicial Department.

Mr. Callahan served on the Mexican Border with the 22d (New York) Regiment of Engineers during the 1916 campaign. He enlisted in the Naval Reserve in May, 1917, as a seaman, second-class, and was honorably discharged in 1919, with the rank of lieutenant (J. G.).

responsibilities of active life.

We need the services of our young people in peace as urgently as we do in war. They should not be compelled to waste valuable years in classrooms. Opportunity to participate in life's affairs at as early an age as is possible should always be open. If war has opened the eyes of the American people to the truth of this, it will prove to be a great victory for the building of a stronger democracy. Other than the defeat of the enemies of our democratic system, I can imagine no social change that would be more wholesome or more invigorating to our form of life.

Graduates and Undergraduates in the Nation's Armed Forces

The Justinian publishes herewith a roster of the graduates and undergraduates of Brooklyn Law School in the armed services of the United States. A Letter From Abroad

The following letter is one of hundreds which have been received by Dean Richardson, members of the Faculty and students, from law school students serving their country at home and abroad. Regretful that lack of space makes it impossible to print all of them, we present Private Spruch's as typical. It is dated April 16, 1942.

Dear Brooklyn Law School:

I cannot attend class tonight, for I am over ten thousand miles away. It was easy enough to continue studies while I was stationed at Fort Jay, Governors Island, but getting to the school, in time for roll call from this distance is a problem too deep for me to solve. I regret that I had to leave just a month before bar examinations, but nothing is half as important just now as winning this war. I hope those of my fellow seniors who had not yet been inducted, passed the exams and will graduate next month.

The ocean trip was one to be remembered. It was interesting, and it was completed in perfect safety. Now I am stationed in a pretty park "Somewhere in Australia," and liking it fine. I would like to hear from you. My mailing address is Pvt. Seymour Spruch, 201st Signal Depot Co., A. P. O. 1117, Postmaster, San Francisco, Cal.

Pre-Induction Enlistment Plan Is Made Public

now available to qualified college students who enter, or have entered, the Brooklyn Law School of St. Lawrence University on the basis of less than a baccalaureate degree, and who are pursuing a full programme of day-time classes.

The objective of the program is "to insure for the Army a future source of qualified officer candidates from college graduates, and, to the extent necessary to accomplish this purpose, to encourage students to enroll and continue in college."

Applies to Law School

Regularly matriculated law students now attending the Brooklyn Law School of St. Lawrence University, and college undergraduates who enter the law school this fall or thereafter may apply for enlistment under the plan designed originally for colleges. A recent ruling from the Adjutant General states: "Initial enrollment in Enlisted Reserve Corps is limited to undergraduate students who are pursuing a course of study leading to their first degree. Law students not holding a baccalaureate degree may be enlisted initially within the quota allotted to a selected college (i.e. law school) provided that their college attendance, both as undergraduates and law students, does not exceed a total which is the equivalent of eight semesters of college study under a normal college program, at time of their enlistment. It should be pointed out that no deferment from active service will be granted beyond a total of eight semesters of a normal college course."

Law students who have completed eight semesters of collegiate education, such as holders of baccalaureate degrees, are not eligible to enroll under the plan. However, those who are regularly entered on law student qualifying certificates granted on the basis of four semesters of college study are eligible for a deferment of four semesters of law study. Those who have had five, six, or seven collegiate semesters may be deferred for three, two, or one semesters of law study, respectively. Accordingly, third and fourth year law students are not eligible under the present system, since they have already completed at least eight semesters of collegiate and professional education.

Procedure to Follow

The procedure is as follows: if a day student desires to enlist under the plan, first he must apply to the law school office. His record will be then evaluated, and if his qualifications are indicative of potential officer material, his name will be recommended to the War Department. On approval by the War Department, the student is authorized to enlist immediately in the Enlisted Reserve Corps on an inactive status without choice of service, except that he may ask to serve in the Air Corps, flying or non-flying. He must pass a physical examination at this time, equivalent to that given applicants for Officers Candidate Schools. Eye-sight requirements are moderate.

If he passes, he is enlisted, withdrawn from the jurisdiction of his local draft board, and is given an identification card indicating his status. At the end of his deferment period (or on withdrawal or dismissal from school prior thereto) he is at once called into active service on an enlisted status at the nearest Replacement Center of the Arm or Service of the Army for which he is best qualified. He may state his preference for a particular branch of service at this time. Upon successful completion of the normal course of training, and if otherwise qualified or selected, he will be ordered to the proper Officer Candidate School.

1A Students Eligible

Students are eligible even if already classified as 1A in the draft so long as they have not received a notice of induction. Those whose induction is imminent may still enlist in the Corps. No release is required from the local draft board.

Plans are now being formulated for a comprehensive joint recruiting plan for the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Marines and Air Forces, which will provide a revised and unified system of student deferments. Details may be announced shortly.

All schools participating in the Enlisted Reserve Corps plan have been given limited maximum quotas beyond which students may not be recommended for enlistment. Therefore, it is urged that all interested students who believe themselves eligible and qualified, should communicate at once with the law school office, or Prof. Milton G. Gershenson, who has been designated as Liaison Agent at the law school for the Enlisted Reserve Corps.

Tale of Lectern in 3 Chapters

ever, when in a burst of enthusiasm, the Appellate Division justices appropriated it to supply the missing want for the Court of Appeals.

The following exchange of letters took place:

Justice Cuff to John W. Davis
Dear Mr. Davis:

I greatly enjoyed your humorous and enlightening remarks at the Judicial Section luncheon. Besides, you made me happy by referring to the difficulties encountered by lawyers because of the absence of reading tables for counsel. My petitions to win that reform for all court rooms have fallen upon the deaf ears of those who were able, as you will learn, to hear what you said.

One day I ventured into the new building wherein the Brooklyn Appellate Division was to dissect, ignore, annul and disregard from time to time, my modest judicial efforts. As discomfort was gaining on me, my eyes fell upon two reading tables of walnut, and I was glad to have reason to leave. I recalled that the reading tables provided in the old Appellate Division courtroom were mahogany.

Reading Table Abandoned

Without notice to anyone I strayed back to Borough Hall. Radical noisy remodeling of the old courtroom was in progress. In a corner, scratched and dusty, reposed one of the reading tables upon which the learned had at one time looked down and obtained legal and literary sustenance for quick use while arguing appeals. It had abandoned its uprightness and neutrality; it was now entirely on one side.

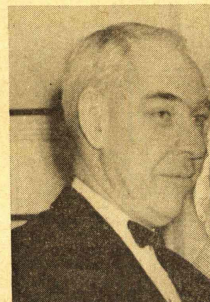

Timidly I applied to the Building Superintendent for its release and restoration to former dignity and service in the courtrooms to which I would be assigned. Cops were the notes he took. Voluminous files lacked the data that would make possible a ruling in my favor. Long telephonic talks with "Ed" and "Jim" and "Mr. So and So" and even "The Chief" about "what da ya call it" with my appropriate prompting "reading table," were equally unfruitful.

I left the Building Department to return to the old courtroom, the scene of the remodeling, hammering and disturbed plaster. As I quietly and even nonchalantly took possession of the abandoned reading table, a workman asked "Where are you going with that stool?" It seems that an itinerant Borough Hall bootblack had claimed it. I made no reply. The workman looked closer and said "It's you, all right." Evidently he realized that he had not recognized the bootblack when he first spoke.

My recollection is that the Building Superintendent, who reserved decision, assured me when I left him that he would consult with the Board of Estimate, Commissioner of Accounts and the American Youth Congress on whether or not this Appellate table could be converted into a trial table, without Mr. Hull negotiating a new reciprocal trade treaty. I await the determination for filing purposes only.

Leaning Place For Lawyers
Lawyers have leaned upon

Justice Thomas J. Cuff

that little table in my courtrooms these past few months and I have noticed the mental nourishment that they derive from its association as they are inspired to ask "Did you ever talk to your lawyer about this case?" That little refugee from that atmosphere of printed records, lengthy briefs and reversing reasoning seemed contented and happy while with me where, if it accomplished nothing more, it furnished a leaning post for weary interrogators.

It is all ended! Your words of grievance plus Judge Lehman's plea of financial dilemma prompted our Appellate Division to seek out those reading tables which they had heretofore wilfully deserted. I have always believed that mine served as the "Defendant's Table" in Borough Hall. It bore few signs of wear. The other, the plaintiff's, carried scars of mistreatment of a permanent character. It was reduced to hopeless wreckage in that old Appellate Division courtroom. And in this, all plaintiffs' lawyers concur.

Perhaps you know which member of the Brooklyn Appellate Division is a carpenter. Whoever it is that wields a saw and hammer in his unreserved moments restored the table to its shape and mended its wounds. Someone told them that I was using it mate in my courtrooms and in true Appellate Division style, in my absence in Nassau, they lifted it. I recall a maxim of my boyhood equitable jurisprudence "Second thief, best owner."

I have made no protest although I feel that the table would like me to have done so because now it is on its way to the Court of Appeals to try to render services in that tribunal famed because its mistakes are so lasting. As it rounds out its noble career, I refer to the table that briefly came under my influence, it will always remember that for a short spell it enjoyed the clear air of the trial court. Basking in those memories it may be able to withstand the new environs wherein so much good is undone.

Again complimenting you upon your fine talk at the dinner but personally and in behalf of the table regretting the immediate and overpowering effects thereof, I am

Sincerely,
(Signed) THOMAS J. CUFF,
Justice, Supreme Court.

Mr. Davis to Justice Cuff
Davis Polk Wardwell Gardiner & Reed
15 Broad Street
New York
Hon. Thomas J. Cuff
My dear, New York
Dear Judge:

I have just read with intense enjoyment "The Saga of the Reading Stand." It deserves to be embalmed along with Swift's "Tale of the Tub," or the poem of the "Grandfather's Clock."

Anyhow, I am glad to see that my casual remarks at the Bar dinner have aroused an echo. As far as I know, this is the only speech I ever made at a lunch or dinner that accomplished any result whatever.

I enclose for your delectation a copy of a letter from Judge Lehman, which I have no doubt is but another chapter in your epic.

Yours, as ever,

(Signed) JOHN W. DAVIS

Judge Lehman to John W. Davis
Dear Mr. Davis:

A most convenient and up-to-date reading desk was in place at the opening of this session of the court on Monday. It is the property of the Appellate Division, Second Department, but that court has two reading desks and kindly sent one to the Court of Appeals with a memorandum:

"To be returned to the Appellate Division, Second Department, whenever the Legislature appropriates fifteen dollars."

I can now assure you that you will, in the future, be able to stand boldly upright when you appeal to this court "in the name of God and the constitution," and there will be no need of a contribution from you out of the fee which Professor Rodell has informed the world you receive "incidentally" for making such an appeal.

The bar again owes you a debt of gratitude.

Cordially,

(Signed) IRVING LEHMAN
Chief Judge, Court of Appeals.
